Description: Open data repository to facilitate research on the relationship between neighborhoods and health, especially within the context of large federally funded surveys and cohort studies. Used to explore topics of interest to neighborhoods and communities. NaNDA measures can be readily linked to survey data, cohort studies, electronic medical records, or other microdata, via geographic identifiers, or combined and explored on their own. NaNDA datasets are created by researchers in the Social Environment and Health program at the University of Michigan Institute for Social Research.
