Description: CISCRP is a resource for information on participation in, understanding of, and resources for clinical research participants and scientists. The mission of the Center is to educate, inform and empower patients, the public, medical and research professionals, the media and policymakers about clinical research participation and what it means to be an active participant in the clinical research process, promote greater awareness and understanding of clinical research participation and the role that it plays in public health, facilitate more effective collaboration among all members of the clinical research enterprise, and provide resources for the research community to better understand the study volunteer. To that end, the Center has developed a broad national awareness and education initiative in order to better inform the public at large about clinical study information. Furthermore, on its website, the Center offers program and event information related to clinical trials, an information center with facts, figures, informational resources, and FAQs for both patients and researchers, and a mailing list of clinical trial information. :The Center also maintains its own search engine website, : searchclinicaltrials.org : : , for those looking for further clinical trial information. The Center for Information and Study on Clinical Research Participation is located in Dedham, MA. :NIF thanks the : : Parkinson's Disease Foundation : : for their referral of this resource to us.
