Description: THIS RESOURCE IS NO LONGER IN SERVICE, documented on March 23, 2012. The National Neurologic AIDS Bank (NNAB) is a site of the HIV/CNS Tissue Network. Based in Los Angeles, which has the largest and most diverse AIDS population in the western United States, the NNAB provides researchers with well-characterized neural tissue from HIV-1-infected and seronegative control donors. The NNAB collaborates with the other designated sites, funding agencies, and outside experts to develop local and national tissue networks. There are plans to create a Network Steering Committee, a panel of outside advisers, and a protocol to recruit and characterize human donors. The NNAB collects pre- and post-mortem clinical data and neural tissues using a standardized autopsy protocol, and the bank stores, codes, catalogs, and distributes this tissue. An electronic database and an Internet-based application process that researchers can use to access the Network's resources are being designed.
